Lawrence man busted with $2.2M in heroin, fentanyl

Drugs. A man was charged in connection with a drug ring between Massachusetts and New Hampshire.

Massachusetts State Police and local law enforcement seized 30 pounds of heroin and fentanyl, worth $2.2 million on the streets.

Jose Casellas, 37, was busted on Thursday and was arraigned in Lawrence District Court on Friday for two counts of trafficking heroin, three counts of possession of a firearm without a license and providing a fake name at the booking.

On Thursday, officers in Andover seized approximately three kilograms of heroin and fentanyl on Casellas. After conducting a search warrant of Casellas' Lawrence home, officers found 15 kilos of heroin and fentanyl, three guns, a kilo press, digital scales and other packaging material. He is being held on $2 million cash bail.

Attorney General Maura Healey said that her office aims to criminalize fentanyl trafficking.

"Fentanyl is far more potent than heroin," Healey said. "But there are currently no criminal charges for trafficking it."

According to DrugAbuse.gov, fentanyl is a powerful synthetic opiate that is far more powerful than morphine. It is used to treat severe pain. It can be injected, applied with a

"It is a super drug," Scott Schaus of the Boston University Chemistry Department said. "Fentanyl mixed with heroin is a powerful mix of two compounds that both bind the opioid receptors in the brain that increases the euphoric feeling."

Law officials worked in a joint task force with the Attorney General's office, Massachusetts State Police Transportation Drug Unit, the DEA, Lawrence, Andover and Methuen police departments.

"We usually don't see seizures like this," State Police Col. Tim Alben said. "This operation without a doubt saved the life of someone who would have overdosed on this poison. Of course we know that users will continue to seek other sources of drugs. We continue to work with social service agencies that provide help to reduce demand, while we continue to hammer the supply."

Alben said that the state police counted 114 deaths con-

Fentanyl, a 'super drug'

Fentanyl was approved by the FDA for injections in 1968.

- A .1 milligram dose of fentanyl is as strong as 10mg of morphine.
- The DEA declared a surge in fentanyl-laced heroin deaths in March, 2015.
- Bay State officials are starting to regard opiate addiction as a health crisis instead of criminal behavior.
- The Medicines and Healthcare Products Regulatory Agency issued a warning about the potential life-threatening exposure to the fentanyl patches used to relieve extreme pain and are in need of around-the-clock comfort.

nected to opiates in December, but that number is in decline, dropping to 55 so far in June.

"We're seeing early indications that the deaths are starting to go down," Alben said. "But 55 is still too many."

Casellas is thought to have a large role in a heroin distribution ring between Massachusetts and New Hampshire. He is due back in Lawrence District Court for a probable cause hearing on July 22.

Monument. Confederate flag 'not an act of vandalism': Police

The Robert Gould Shaw and the 54th Regiment monument on Beacon Hill / NICOLAUS CZARNECKI, METRO

A Confederate flag was hung last night from the Robert Gould Shaw and Massachusetts 54th Regiment Memorial, located at the Boston Common across from the State House.

A man who said he was with the group that hung the flag told The Boston Globe that he and the others gathered at the memorial to burn the Confederate banner as a tribute to the soldiers of the 54th Regiment. The group was eventually stopped by a police officer.

Before the group left the area, one of them tied a damaged flag to Shaw's sword, according to The Globe. Police officials said that they got a call at 10:25 p.m. last night to investigate the property. Once officials arrived on the scene, the flag had been removed by an unknown person and allegedly thrown into a trash can nearby.

Detectives who investigated the property said this was not an act of vandalism because the flag had been removed and no property was damaged.

Robert Gould Shaw came from a family of abolitionists and led the all-black Massachusetts 54th Regiment during the Civil War. Shaw and his men were portrayed on film in the 1989 movie "Glory."

Boston 2024 Olympic 'Bid 2.0' unveiled

Game changer.

Organizers are pushing a message of neighborhood-building to win support for the 2024 Summer Games.

Pushing a long view of benefits for Boston, Olympic organizers on Monday released the highly anticipated updated plans for the city's $4.6 billion bid for the Summer Games.

Boston 2024, the group charged with planning and promoting the Games, are calling the release Bid 2.0. It comes amid skepticism statewide about the cost to taxpayers and impact on residents and calls from Gov. Charlie Baker for answers on funding and planning.

The lengthy documents, unveiled at the Boston Convention and Exhibition Center, focus especially on two major projects in Widett Circle and Columbia Point, spanning more than 110 acres expected to cost roughly $4 billion, paid for by private developers.

In the city, major plans include a build on Franklin Park for horse jumping and dressage and improvements to the aging White Stadium.

Organizers claim the games would end with a $210 million surplus and bring big change for the better.

"This is going to bring a lot of jobs and a lot of housing and a lot of great things to the region," Steve Pagliuca, chairman of Boston 2024 said Monday.

Organizers have proposed developing Widett Circle, a chunk of the city near South Boston and the South End, for Olympic purposes and calling it "Midtown."

During a Summer Games in Boston, it would house the Olympic Stadium, the massive structure that would house the opening ceremonies and track and field events.

For the so-called "Athletes' Village," which would house Olympic competitors from around the world, organizers are eyeing Columbia Point in Dorchester.

Opponents of the Olympics, though, said they were concerned about what the lengthy bid documents do not say. Not spelled out in bid documents is where organizers would build the bicycle track known as a "Velodrome" or where the Summer Games' aquatic events might be held.

"They've had two years now to put together a plan that shows it's responsible and that it's well thought out," said Chris Dempsey, co-chair of No Boston 2024, an anti-Olympics advocacy group. "Instead, what we're seeing is major questions about venues are still unanswered."

Crime. Hyde Park man charged with slashing three kids with knife

Bail has been set at $100,000 for the Hyde Park man accused of stabbing three children on Saturday, according to the Suffolk district attorney's office.

Rock Aurelian, 51, was charged Monday in West Roxbury Municipal Court with three counts of assault and battery with a dangerous weapon and armed assault with intent to murder after he allegedly slashed a 15-year-old girl and two boys, 9 and 11, with a knife. The children were treated with non-life-threatening injuries. He was described by investigators as a family friend.

The attack was reported when blood-soaked children ran down River Street to a neighbor's house and then to a corner store, screaming for help. The Boston Globe reported.

The girl had been stabbed multiple times in the arm. A pool of blood stained the street on the 1600 block of River Street, and a bloody trail led to a neighbor's house.

The children were described as confused and in shock, according to the report. The neighbor dialed 911, but the children were inconsolable and kept screaming that the man might still be after them. The children kept running, and the 12-year-old boy ran down the block to the corner store. According to witnesses, the boy screamed "save my life," while the other two children remained outside. A customer called 911 and the three were taken to the hospital.

Aurelian admitted his involvement in the attack, according to the DA.

He is due back in court July 28. NATE ROMAN

Five things you need to know

1 Greece in shock as banks shut after referendum call

Stunned Greeks faced shuttered banks, long supermarket lines and overwhelming uncertainty on Monday as a breakdown in talks with international lenders plunged their country deep into crisis.

With Greece's bailout expiring on June 30 and an International Monetary Fund payment falling due at the same time, Prime Minister Alexis Tsipras pleaded in vain by phone with European officials to extend the program until a referendum on July 5 on its future terms.

The frantic efforts to secure Greece's place within the eurozone followed a dramatic weekend. Tsipras' decision, early on Saturday, to put the aid package to a popular vote took the lenders by surprise and sent Greeks rushing to cash machines.

It also pushed Greece toward defaulting on 1.6 billion euros ($1.77 billion) due to the IMF on Tuesday, which would take it closer to an exit from the eurozone. A Greek official confirmed to Reuters that the payment would not be made.

2 First marriage licenses for same-sex couples issued in Louisiana

The first marriage licenses to same-sex couples in Louisiana were issued on Monday after state officials held off for several days on implementing a U.S. Supreme Court ruling that legalized gay marriage nationwide.

Two women were granted a marriage license in Jefferson Parish near New Orleans.

The state's Republican attorney general, Buddy Caldwell, issued a statement after the high court ruling Friday saying that his office had "found nothing in today's decision that makes the court's order effective immediately."

3 State Dept. to release more Clinton emails

The U.S. State Department said it would release on Tuesday the next tranche of emails from Hillary Clinton's tenure as secretary of state.

Department spokesman Mark Toner told reporters on Monday the emails would be released, but he had no further details.

Clinton, the front-runner for the 2016 Democratic presidential nomination, has been criticized for her use of a private email address, connected to a computer server in her home, for her work correspondence while she was the nation's top diplomat.

4 Ku Klux Klan fliers left on lawns in LA suburb

Ku Klux Klan propaganda fliers were left in front of houses in a Los Angeles suburb over the weekend, the second such incident in Southern California in a week, prompting homeowners to contact police.

Police in Whittier, California, about 12 miles southeast of Los Angeles, said in a statement the fliers touting the white supremacist group were found littered on lawns in one block on Sunday.

"Throughout the block, clear Ziploc bags ... contained fliers, a rock and pieces of candy," police said on Sunday. "No specific threats were noted on the fliers, and no crime has been established."

5 Court agrees to weigh affirmative action in school admissions

The U.S. Supreme Court waded into a new major battle over the future of affirmative action in college admissions by agreeing to take up for the second time a challenge to the process for picking students used by the University of Texas.

The justices agreed to hear a case brought by Abigail Fisher, a white applicant who was denied admission to the entering class of 2008 at Texas' flagship state university. The court will review a July 2014 ruling by the New Orleans-based 5th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals in favor of the university.

That's a much more demure and even-toned take on the issue than how she phrased it in London when accepting a Woman of the Year award from Glamour: "I'm probably, like, 160 pounds right now, and I can catch a d— whenever I want," she said. ## Doctor Shia!

Shia LaBeouf has been popping up in some odd places lately, morphing his public persona into some kind of bizarre performance art piece. But this — which he didn't necessarily have anything to do with — is just plain neat. Artist Brandon Bird has gone and rendered The Beef as all 13 incarnations of Doctor Who for ... some reason. He makes a surprisingly good Time Lord in any era, but the 10th really looks the most natural. But maybe that's just the David Tennant fan in me.

Yes, straight dudes can enjoy 'Magic Mike' too

Channing Tatum, center, leads an army of six-packs in Steven Soderbergh's "Magic Mike." / WARNER BROS. PICTURES

In defense. The 2012 stripper dramedy and its new sequel were made for women and gay or bisexual men. But there's stuff for hetero bros, too.

It's really well-made

"Magic Mike" delivers the goods, which is to say junk thrusts toward the lens, plus Channing Tatum buttage by Minute 2. But it wasn't helmed by some exploitation hack; behind the lens was the guy nominated for two best director Oscars the same year. (He won for "Traffic" over "Erin Brockovich.") Steven Soderbergh gives it his usual detached, almost clinical tone, which helps downplay the script's occasional soapier, hoarier tendencies. And because he photographed it too (as he did "Magic Mike XXL," which he did not direct), it looks great, and not only when ripped alpha gods are strutting about.

It's about something

Stripping is a job, and "Magic Mike" never forgets it. In fact, it's very much a film in our world, namely one still caught up in the wake of the economic apocalypse. Tatum's Mike has a dream: creating an oddball furniture business. Money is always on everyone's mind. Sometimes they're even funny about it. In a scene where Mike tries and fails to get a loan from a bank, his exasperation is expressed in modern vernacular: "I read the news. I know the ones in distress are y'all."

Speaking of which ... It's pretty funny

Along with boasting its star's dance moves and deeply impressive back-flip abilities, "Magic Mike" is a showcase for Tatum's by now established comedic chops. He has a way with a mumbly, weird line reading, plus an endearing knack for letting his goofy side fly. His jokey side mixes nicely with that of his director, who has one of the oddest senses of humor in the biz. Soderbergh gives "Magic Mike" a deadpan air, plus oddball jokes, like the retro Warner Bros. logo and forcing co-star Matthew McConaughey to mock his own bongo-gate.

The dancing is good

Straight men, don't be so uptight. A solid dance scene is a solid dance scene, and even if you're no great admirer of the male figure, you can enjoy the copious stripping numbers as performances. You can also enjoy them for what they are, namely sequences whose chief visual pleasure is not for straight men. That rarely happens in blockbuster cinema, which is almost uniformly aimed at delighting male teens, or the male teens inside us (maybe). That they're goofy, filled with silly costumes and ridiculous concepts, helps too. If you're a straight male watching "Magic Mike," you can enjoy that someone who isn't you is, for a change, being taken to their own happy place.

Manic panic

Film. Mark Ruffalo explores bipolar fatherhood with indie "Infinitely Polar Bear."

Delving into a character with mental illness can be a tricky business, but Mark Ruffalo had a unique avenue of research for his latest, "Infinitely Polar Bear." First-time writer-director Maya Forbes hired Ruffalo to pretty much play her late father.

The indie calls on Ruffalo to portray Cam Stuart, struggling to raise his two daughters in 1970s Boston while his wife (fellow Marvel stable-mate Zoe Saldana) heads to graduate school in New York, and his manic depression wreaks havoc on everyday life.

"I have bipolar family members, so it wasn't totally out of left field," Ruffalo says. "Then I met Maya and started hearing the stories about Cam and watching his Super 8 movies. It just felt like, 'OK, I think I know the way into this.' It feels right to me, and it's not a glossed-over, gilded version that as I get into doing research about, I'm going to find some totally different person, and then there's going to be some conflict between me and Maya about that."

In fact, conflict with Forbes

was happily minimal. Ruffalo found her to be incredibly collaborative, something he holds in high regard. "I'd have my moments of rebellion, as any actor should at some point or another, but never felt like our views of it were divergent," he says. "All the great directors that I've worked with are able to take collaboration without being threatened by it. But it's atypical to first-time directors, that openness, to have that kind of strong vision that you're confident to take collaboration from everybody."

For Ruffalo, although the film puts Cam's bipolar disorder front and center, it was important that it didn't totally define the character. "If you have a guy who's an a—hole who's in a wheelchair, he's still an a—hole. And if you have a really nice person in a wheelchair, they're still a really nice person," Ruffalo says. "Yes, who they are is informed by having to live in that wheelchair, but to some degree, who that person is is essentially who they are, and bipolar is something that swings in and out of their life. So for me, the really important thing was getting the specifics of Cam, who Cam was. Cam was this person who had a lot of really interesting qualities about him and would've been a really interesting person without being bipolar. That was the impediment that the family had to deal with."

Souring on Sundance

Despite the time he's been devoting to playing an Avenger, Mark Ruffalo still has his feet firmly planted in the independent film world. Last year, for instance, he had a trio of dramas making the festival rounds with "Begin Again," "Foxcatcher" and "Infinitely Polar Bear." That last one, in fact, made its debut at the Sundance Film Festival, a venue Ruffalo knows very well — though the shine might be coming off the Utah-based winter retreat for him. "The sense of competition at Sundance, I think, can be a little toxic amongst the filmmakers," he says. "And then everyone's there trying to sell a movie."

Almost 'Magic'

We find out just what it takes to get ripped like the men of "Magic Mike XXL."

ELODIE NOEL, MWN
@MetroBOS
letters@metro.us

Celebrity trainer Ron Mathews first started working with Joe Manganiello six years ago, when the actor was cast in HBO's "True Blood."

Back then, Manganiello was 6'5" and weighed 240 pounds, and Mathews remembers him saying, "I want to get bigger; I want to be muscular. And I told him, 'Actually, you need to get smaller.'"

It's related to the camera adding 10 pounds: "When you do a slow workout, you tend to look big in person, but you look a bit floppy onscreen," he explains. "Taking his body fat down makes muscles pop on-screen."

What it takes to take it off

But Manganiello had to push his regimen (detailed in the book he and Mathews worked on together, "Evolution") even further for the male stripper sequel "Magic Mike XXL."

"For 'Magic Mike,' he wanted to look really big and cut," Mathews says. "It's a very physical role with the dancing; it was about looking good but also moving well with coordination like an athlete. It was about training to be able to perform, as opposed to just standing there in front of the camera and looking good."

Training meant working out six days a week — twice a day. Mornings were cardio (on an empty stomach) then in the afternoon or evening, Manganiello did weight training. The workout takes about an hour, including a warm-up and a cooldown, and it is very fast, with few breaks. "The idea is to keep his heart rate very high," says Mathews.

The role of food

The right diet is a huge part of the regimen, and Manganiello was a dream client. "He is incredibly disciplined," says Mathews. "The good thing about him is that he doesn't need a lot of variety, so if you tell him that's what you need to eat, he will do it over and over again."

When you're working toward a fitness goal, Mathews says, food is not for pleasure; it is just another tool. Manganiello ate six meals a day, roughly 500 to 600 calories each with 30 percent protein, 30 percent fat and 40 percent carbs. Each meal was pretty similar and consisted of eggs, chicken, vegetables and rice or potatoes. The calories could also come from a big salad or sushi, as long as you go easy on the rice.

"When trying to lose fat while keeping your muscle, you need to make sure you get enough calories, because if you don't, you will lose muscle," explains Mathews. "You need to be able to maintain your frame and have enough energy to pursue your workout."

Letters to the editor

The crux of the clause

The first thing to point out is that the definition of marriage is not in the Constitution — it is an opinion. The second is that section one of the 14th amendment states, "The Equal Protection Clause of the 14th amendment of the U.S. Constitution prohibits states from denying any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws." See U.S. Const. amend. XIV. In other words, the laws of a state must treat an individual in the same manner as others in similar conditions and circumstances. A violation would occur, for example, if a state prohibited an individual from entering into an employment contract because he or she was a member of a particular race. The equal protection clause is not intended to provide "equality" among individuals or classes but only "equal application" of the laws. The result, therefore, of a law is not relevant so long as there is no discrimination in its application. By denying states the ability to discriminate, the equal protection clause of the Constitution is crucial to the protection of civil rights.

What this essentially means is that states don't have the authority to discriminate, which is what was being done.

Patriotism is for everyone

Re: 'Max' (Metro, June 26-28)

It's really a sad day in this country when Matt Prigge cannot give a review of a movie without bashing the red states (especially Texas), the Bible Belt and patriotic movies. What's wrong, Matt — because these people don't think the same way as you do, they are outcasts? FYI, there are people in THIS state and EVERY state who are God-fearing, flag-waving patriots who don't follow along like a bunch of sheep. Wake up — or more importantly, grow up.

US vs. Germany is a title game in and of itself

World Cup. The two premier countries in women's soccer do battle tonight.

In women's international soccer, it doesn't get much bigger than what will be on tap Tuesday (7 p.m., Fox) at Montreal's Olympic Stadium: the U.S. vs. Germany in the 2015 World Cup semifinals. Many soccer experts are treating this as the de facto title game as Germany comes in as the No. 1 ranked team by FIFA and the United States is No. 2. The winner, no doubt, will be favored to go all the way as Japan and England sit on the other side of the bracket.

The Americans and Germans have only met three times in previous Women's World Cups with the U.S. holding a 2-1-0 advantage (all coming in knockout rounds). The U.S. (1991, 1999) and Germany (2003, 2007) are also the most decorated countries in the World Cup: they are the only teams to have won the ultimate prize more than once.

Final Four

The 2015 Women's World Cup is down to four teams.

- The U.S. and Germany will square off tonight in the semi-finals (7 p.m., Fox).
- Japan and England go head-to-head Wednesday (7 p.m., FS1).
- The World Cup title game is Sunday, July 5 (7 p.m., Fox).

"We are facing a match between two top teams that will give nothing away," German defender Leonie Maier said. "It'll be a very tough battle."

Though both clubs were expected to reach this point as soon as the groups were unveiled months ago, each squad had to put in some serious work in the quarterfinals on Friday just to get here. Germany was down 1-0 to France with only a few minutes left in regulation when it tied it on a penalty kick score by star forward Celia Sasic. The Germans then prevailed, 5-4, in penalty kicks (following a scoreless extra time, going 5 for 5 in the shootout (the German have, amazingly enough, never missed one at the World Cup). Goalkeeper Nadine Angerer stopped France's Claire Lavogez's shot in the fifth round to end it.

The United States' 1-0 win over China wasn't quite as dramatic. Underrated midfielder Carli Lloyd (who wore the captain's armband that night) scored on a header in the 51st minute and the Americans recorded their fourth straight shutout (a team-best 423 straight shutout minutes and counting at this World Cup). Defender Kelley O'Hara and forward Amy Rodriguez were surprise starters for the U.S. against China and they brought a noticeable spark in their first action of the tournament. Midfielder Morgan Brian (the youngest player on the U.S. team at 22) also started while Abby Wambach only came on as a substitute in the final few moments.
